Governments, public agencies, national departments and other public organisations, regularly collect important corpuses of data in order to conduct their activities; data that is usually handled as a simple repository of information at hand of the responsible authorities. However, we believe that this data should be made available to the citizens, in order to create additional value and benefit from its innovative potential. Open data is fundamental to guarantee public transparency and help citizens take decisions and only by establishing the conviction, and setting the necessary measures, to guarantee that public data is made open, reusable and easily available will civic engagement, economic activity and public trust be enhanced.
